Ex-CIA Agent
Joins Oakland
Oriental Staff

A long-time U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) staff member will join the Oakland University staff next fall as director of Oriental Studies.

Named to the post was Clyde B. Sargent, a veteran of more than 20 years in Federal service, the last 13 as chief of CIA's foreign language training program.

Before the long CIA hitch, Sargent, age 56, saw extensive service in the Far East. It included various intelligence assignments with the wartime Office of Strategic Services (OSS), stints with Korean and Chinese advisory groups and a stretch as U.S. commissioner to a joint, Russian-American-Korean Commission.

OU requires a year of Oriental studies to promote better understanding of cultural differences between East and West. It now covers Chinese and Indian languages and cultures.
